Thus saith the Wirt Transcript, in whose county resides Mr. William of thing real, and such a terrible this kind of thing real, and such a terrible deep was presented as a seersucker coat, pushed the was long at the real terrible the county in the crowd with somethis kind of thing said, and such a terrible her way through the crowd with someticking up of heels, that the appointment thing bulging out under her shawl. She threw back the shawl and discovered the shawl and discovered because of the water-melon. She was revoked. But there remain said some very ugly things which cannot be unsaid. And, allab be praised! there remains our "offensive pariisan" F. W. B. Asseler, to be uncompromising and noisy. as heretofore, and for the local Democracy to contend with.

The Intelligences feels like saying, in the interest of harmony, that the Demodeath, as seems to be the disposition, for the watermeion season. desiring to help along his Republican brother. If this kind of thing had not been done to the third and fourth generation the new administration would not have stubbed its great American toe against so many Democrats when it began to kick the razcals out. We must be charitable, generous-give and take, always remembering in politics to take all we can get and give as little as possible.

A Striking Tribate.

The feature of General Grant's death and burial that will live as long as his

It is natural and fitting that the whole people should lament the desth of Grant. Appomattox will be forever one of the landmarks of universal history, illustrating landmarks of universal history, illustrating how a people could do or die, not for the petty ambition of a solder or a statesman, but for a cause that was just and touched all humanity. There has been much profitles talk about the site for a monument to the memory of Grant. Appobut for a cause that was just and touched all humanity. There has been much profilees talk about the site for a monnment to the memory of Grant. Appomattox is monument enough. That is the crown of his victories and of his fame. It marks also the new birth of this people. It taught a lesson to the world, illustrated the other day by the memorial services in Westminster Abbey. It taught the world that true republicanism, which is the coduct of public affairs for and by the public, was a fact, and that a free Contect of public affairs for and by the public, was a fact, and that a free Conted and the fearful trial of even a fratricidal war. From that day out the United States, after rediring their citizen armies and holding only a handful of regular soldiers, took rank among the great powers of the world. The foremest loreign foe against the came and the Unien for which Grant and our armies fought was England, whose Queen and people gave a memorial service at Westminster in honor of the dead soldier. England to day seeks the friendship and good will of the people whom she wished to destroy. We have grown a little in twenty years. We should have been out of existence as a Confaderacy of free States had not citizen Grant and his citizen armies crushed the rebellion. It is of the very essence of freedom to abolish slavery.

So we leave Grant at Appormattox, and join in the general sorrow at his death. He bore his southers may mistake. Mistakes also attended his olvic career. His best work was his work as a soldier and his fame will rest on that. His modesty, the modesty of a man who held the fate of a country in his hands, was remarkable. Grant never 'smade a splurge,' He was not without faults. What man is faulties? No generous man cares to count faults over a grave. In one respect, and a most important one, he standages an ax soldier had not the south of the continuation of the face, the modesty, the modesty of man who held the fate of a country need for the country was a soldier and this fame and under circue and t

There has been nothing better said about Grant, though there has been more falsome praise employed for his eulogy. A great soldier whose sword decided a momentous question and gave his country a new birth; a modest man who did his duty because it was his duty and with it all chaste. This is a reminder that in all the criticisms, in all the misrepresentations of General Grant, it was never charged nor suspected that he had atepped aside from suspected that he had ne peed sale from the narrow path of classity. There is not many of the great soldiers of whom this can be truly said. It is something to in-scribe on the tomb of the most illustrious American soldier.

harmony have been occasioned by the appointment of a post trader. In a time of variegated reform it should not have been urged that the appointee was a Republican who had been smuggled in under the coat-tails of his Democratic brother.

No such objection should have been male, for by long experience it has been shown that Republicans could make about as much money out of Indians and solders as Democrats used to make. Indeed a tradership is in no sense a political office; and in the sale of rum and riflus it makes little difference whether the trader is in thorough accord with the advanced Civil Service reform policy of the administration.

There are some features of peculiar interest in this new source of Democratic disquietade. Colonel Hassler, who dishes up appointments in the Interior Department and is held responsible for the party misery over the tradership, was a Union soldier. It was largely owing to his indiscreet failure to conocal this fact—as one might say, "rash set"—that as often as he went up to a Democratic convention for prefermenthe went down again with the sweet music of the "Rebel yell" ringing in his ears. Somehow he couldn't strike his kind of a convention.
